Bali: Tenganan Village 2019 Infrastructure Project

Program Details: The Schulich School of Engineering is pleased to offer a global community experience to Bali, Indonesia! This program provides a great opportunity for engineering students to enhance their in-class learning while being immersed in local Balinese culture within the village of Tenganan. Tenganan is an indigenous Balinese village that adheres to traditional Balinese customs and values in contrast to other villages in the island of Bali that are more open to modern rules and convenience. This experience will leave a lasting impression as it is rather rare to find such a traditional village in a rapidly evolving Indonesia. Students here will work hand-in-hand with the local village of Tenganan as well as the University of Udayana in helping to execute solutions for either the spring water pipeline or the plastic garbage recycling systems. At the end of the trip, students will enjoy a farewell celebration including Balinese dance and music entertainment; afterwards, they will also experience an excursion to Besakih Temple and Uluwatu. This program will be a great way for engineering students to apply their theoretical in-class knowledge to practical applications while also enhancing their understanding of international issues and diverse community needs.
